*177 175 361 438 [484] or 37.7 percent of the total population frequently sold provisions at the trade store. This segment of the population also participated in the ancillary regional exchange networks provided by the missionaries and the Amerindian Captain. The remaining 28.4 percent of the population, the 143 individuals in the more remote settlements, made more infrequent trips to the trade store at In Time. Either through informal trade among Caribs themselves or the centralized channels created by the trade store, mining activities involved the entire local population in a common network of regional exchanges. In turn, this network was changed by the abandonment of In Time.

Regional Exchanges Centralized at Baramita Air Strip

*177 175 464 511 The cessation of mining activities late in 1969 again altered the subsistence patterns of the local Carib population. That segment of the population dependent on employment at the mine and maintaining no farms was faced with a subsistence crisis. The opportunities for the remainder of the population to sell provisions was greatly reduced.

*177 175 464 • 657 During the spring and summer of 1970, the Government began introducing programs and services to sustain this population. The new governmental offices have already been detailed (see Figure 3). The resources conveyed to the population through these new channels remain to be discussed. As data are available only for the first year of these new programs at Baramita Air Strip, this must remain a preliminary report.

*177 182 [463] The first year at the Air Strip was one of general parsimony. Job specialization among the Caribs was almost eliminated and everyone returned to rain forest subsistence.
